MADE ARREST OF WRONG MAN

James Pittenturf Charged with Burglary Arrested but given his Freedom when Evidence Failed to Hold. No Goods Found.

James Pittenturf was arrested late Friday afternoon charged with burglary following the entering of several local stores on Thursday night. This morning he was given a hearing before Squire Hill and discharged, there being no evidence against him.

The only pretense on which he was arrested was a cut finger which looked as though it had been hurt by broken glass. Blood had been found on the rear door of the Wineman store on the morning following the burglaries and the two were put together to form circumstantial evidence against the man. At the hearing before Squire Hill the source of the cut was satisfactorily explained and Pittenturf given his freedom.

According to Albert Lentz who works for A. C. Basehoar at the Gettysburg Roller Mills Pittenturf was working there on Thursday afternoon helping to unload a carload of corn when he was cut by a shovel in the hands of another employee, Harry Beecher. Beecher was called and corroborated the statements of Lentz saying that he had happened to cut Pittenturf while they were working together.

There was no other evidence produced and District Attorney Neely and Squire Hill decided that there was no reason whatever why the man should be held. Pittenturf since he was arrested maintained that he had nothing to do with the burglaries.

Pittenturf was standing on the Square when Constable Shearer made the arrest. He at once protested his innocence and said that he had been at home the night before. Nothing was said by either the constable or his prisoner regarding the cut finger.

The Pittenturf home on West High street was then searched on a search warrant but nothing was seen of the goods alleged to have been stolen from the Zinn store and the evidence against the man was entirely that of the wound on his finger.

Mrs. Powers Pittenturf, his mother, protests the boy's innocence and declares that he was home the night of the burglaries. In addition it is said that a number of others are willing to prove an alibi for the young man.

HUNTING GAME LAW VIOLATORS

Special Agent of the State Hunting in Adams and Other Counties those Violating the State's Game Laws.

Premature hunters are being closely watched in Adams County by L. S. Brown, a special state game protector, who has been assigned to duty in this and five other counties. Mr. Brown is a resident of Rouzerville.

He has been busy in looking after the enforcement of the game laws, especially since October 1. He is at the call of the game commissioner all the time and goes wherever he is sent or wherever he believes there is violation of the laws.

Thus far this fall he has been engaged in the discharge of his duties in Franklin, Fulton, Adams, Perry, Cumberland and York counties.

A number of hunters have begun shooting squirrels although the legal squirrel season does not begin until October 15. There will likely be some prosecutions of these law breakers or some fines for them to pay.

It is now legal to shoot doves, plover, blackbirds and woodcock.

It is said rabbits will be very plentiful in this section and that partridges promise to be numerous, although they are now very small.

The origin of the fire is unknown. The house was valued at about $1800, on which there was an insurance of $750. Several hundred dollars worth of furniture were destroyed.

MOUNTAIN FIRE AT CALEDONIA

Fifty Acres of Valuable Timberland Burned Over on the Mountain. Owners Indignant at what they Term State's Indifference.

A bad mountain fire broke out on Thursday, near noon in the timberland in the rear of the country residence of C. P. Speer and A. M. Stager near Caledonia. The high winds aided the conflagration and in a few hours more than fifty acres of valuable timber land were destroyed.

A few neighbors and the owners, succeeded in getting the conflagration under control a few hours later before the rain came up and extinguished it. The outlook for a time was very discouraging and had not the rain come up many hundreds of acres might have been destroyed.

Much criticism was heard by residents who live in that vicinity. They claim that representatives of the state were on the grounds while the fire was in progress but refused to help because of the fact "that it was not state land being destroyed." The citizens cite as an instance this story:

The men had succeeded in checking the blaze along a roadway. They left that section and when they returned the blaze had jumped across the mountain road and was making its way toward the forestry lands, with the state employees doing nothing to check it.

The whole neighborhood is aroused at the alleged state's treatment in its effort to conserve the forests and are of the opinion that the state should at least help to prevent a fire that might eventually destroy a large part of its territory.

A. W. Cole exhibits a stalk of corn measuring 15 feet in height and 3 inches in diameter. The distance from the ground to the first ear is 7 feet and to the second above it 8 feet. This is good for Adams county.

Miss Esther Dillon went to get the mail from their box one day last week, and heard a small bell like a sheep bell but could not locate it until looking up she saw a buzzard above her with a bell on. Some years ago one was seen on the Piney mountain. Probably this is the same one.

THE LITTLE HOMESTEAD

The bitterness of friendship turned to hatred is vividly portrayed in the character of the villain in "The Little Homestead." Here is a man whose soul is consumed with the desire for revenge upon his one time college chum for an imaginary wrong. The play is a charming emotional rural drama in which the characters are taken from life and set in the atmosphere of homelike New England. There is just enough comedy, the right proportion of pretty dialogue and a sufficient number of thrilling situations to round out a well balanced drama of heartfelt interest. At Walter Theatre, Tuesday, October 11.

COULDN'T PUMP SPRING DRY

On the farm of D. P. Forney, Esq., in Conewago township, a mile southwest of Hanover, is a spring four feet deep. Mr. Forney desired to make some improvements to the spring, and it was necessary to get all the water out. Two men worked all day Wednesday without reducing the volume of water. Mr. Forney was compelled to add a large pump, belonging to the Hanover Sewer Company, and with both pumps the water was finally reduced.

WONDER WHO THEY ARE?

The Abbottstown correspondent in the East Berlin News says: "A number of Hanover boys are in the habit of coming to our town Saturday evening and Sunday and show off their ill-bred manners. If they pay us another visit like last Saturday they will be sent home as their families are sadder if not a wiser bunch."

WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

Grew a Full Growth of Hair on a Bald Head

Here's the Proof

For two or three years my hair had been falling out and getting quite thin, until the top of my head was entirely bald. About four months ago I commenced using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur. The first bottle seemed to do some good and I kept using it regularly, until now I have used four bottles. The whole top of my head is now fairly covered with hair and it keeps coming in thicker. I shall keep on using it a while longer, as I notice a constant improvement.

T. R. DENIES HE FIGHTS RICH ONLY

Warmly Defends His Doctrine of New Nationalism.

DEMANDS SQUARE DEAL

Speaking to Big Crowd at Bristol, Tenn., Roosevelt Asks For Equality of Opportunity.

Bristol, Tenn., Oct. 8.—In a speech before a great crowd here, former President Roosevelt warmly defended his doctrine of new nationalism. He attacked crooks both large and small and made a plea for a higher citizenship.

The reception was entirely non-partisan. There was a big crowd at the park despite the threatening weather, and the former president spoke from an improvised platform. The crowd was so great that Colonel Roosevelt had to fight his way from his automobile to the grand stand.

Hundreds of girls from Bristol's large female colleges in their caps and gowns gave a college yell and presented him with a beautiful bouquet of roses.

"Much obliged," Colonel Roosevelt shouted, waving his hat at them. "I am back among my own people," said Colonel Roosevelt.

"I've come back from Africa and Europe feeling that in spite of all of our shortcomings, there is not another land where the average man has such a chance as he does here.

"All that I am trying to do is to keep this land as one in which the average man has a square deal. What I mean by the new nationalism is simply the efficient application of the old moralities to new and changed conditions.

"This country was founded for the purpose of trying to obtain equality of opportunity for all men and who must try measurably to realize that ideal. We must try to see that in political and industrial life there is no special privilege. I do not ask that the lazy or the vicious be given the chance that the hard working man has. All I ask is that we try to bring about equality of opportunity."

Some one shouted: "Hurrah for the man who is for the laboring man!" The crowd cheered, but Colonel Roosevelt held up his hand and said: "Wait a minute. I am for the laboring man. That's true. But only if he is a straight man.

Is Against All Crooks.

"My critics say that I attack only the rich man. That is not true. I'm against the little crook, but there is this distinction: The neighbors of a little crook can take care of him, but when it comes to a man with a hundred million—he's the neighbor of all of us—he's too big for his immediate neighbors and that's why I want Uncle Sam to tackle him."

It is for this reason, Colonel Roosevelt said, that his doctrine of new nationalism included a provision for the careful control of big business interests by the federal government. "That is not revolutionary, but counter revolutionary."

He added that such federal control would obviate conditions which might bring about a revolutionary movement. "Here are two cardinal principles of the new nationalism," he said. "In the first place, efficient honesty; in the second place, the right of the people to rule."

"The men who are honest in Wall street have nothing to fear in new nationalism. But the Wall street man who wants to make a fortune by selling paper which is not worth anything is perfectly right in dreading new nationalism. The man who has a hundred million dollars and uses his power improperly is right in dreading new nationalism, for we intend to shake him of that power."

From the huge audiences came many shouts of "Hurrah for Roosevelt, our next president." At this he only smiled.

JULIA DENT GRANT TO WED

New York Man Suicide in China.

LaFollette is Recovering.

Rochester, Minn., Oct. 8.—Senator LaFollette passed another favorable day and his chances for recovery following the operation for gall stones, continue to improve.

A dairy cow may present a prettier and more natural appearance in the estimate of some folks with her horns on, but a fellow feels quite a bit safer when he has the handling of them if they are off.

It beats everything how a good, square meal or a night's refreshing sleep will change one's attitude toward the old world, things in general and in particular the task which one may have in hand.

"LOST" GOLD MINE FOUND

Skeletons Found in Mexican Shaft Worked 100 Years Ago.

Bisbee, Ariz., Oct. 8.—Mexican officials at Cananea announced the rediscovery of the old Santa Fe-Teresa gold mine, one of the few really "lost" mines of the southwest, which was known to have been worked by the Spaniards more than a century ago and which has been lost since 1810.

The main shaft is well preserved, but the timbers have been removed and the earth has moved in. Two skeletons were found at the bottom of the shaft. The Mexican government is now making arrangements to take charge of the mine.

CAVALIERI PLANNING DIVORCE, 'TIS SAID

Is Preparing to Sue Chanler For Separation.

New York, Oct. 8.—Lina Cavallieri, the pretty songbird to whom Robert Winthrop Chanler virtually signed over his entire estate of millions before making her his bride, it was declared by friends, is preparing to sue for a separation.

According to these friends, the grand opera star, who is wealthy in her own right, is "tired and sick of the whole affair," and is anxious to obtain her freedom from matrimonial bonds as soon as possible. She will, it is said, base her suit on grounds of non-support, of violent treatment and behavior and incompatibility of temper.

Mme. Cavallieri, despite all reports to the contrary, is declared by those who know her well, to be a very sensitive little woman. Her friends say she deprecates such notoriety as her marriage to Chanler has brought her, and she welcomes the day when it will all be forgotten.

Her marriage, Mme. Cavallieri is reported as saying, instead of doing her good socially and in the eyes of the musical public, has injured her immensely. Her friends declare that she believes she was duped and broods constantly over her affairs.

The singer does not think that she has been put in the right light before the American public, and declares that she has suffered in professional dignity and financial prospects.

$5000 FINE FOR SMUGGLING

Mrs. Adriance Pleads Guilty to Failing to Declare $20,000 Jewels.

New York, Oct. 8.—Mrs. A. F. C. Adriance, wife of I. Reynolds Adriance, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., pleaded guilty before Judge Hand, in the United States circuit court (criminal branch) to the charge of failing to declare $20,000 worth of jewelry and merchandise which she brought into this country when she arrived here on the Baltic on Aug. 23 last, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $5000. The fine was paid.

Judge Hand said that the imposing of jail sentences in smuggling cases which was announced applied only to cases developing after Oct. 6.

THE GILA MONSTER

By DAVID WALTER CHURCH

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Little Inez Basquemento, a Mexican girl I saw while engineering in the southwest, was a merry child (if she had been born in the north she would have been a child; but, being a Mexican, she was a woman). She might have been anywhere from fourteen to sixteen. She played the guitar and sang with a little birdlike voice, jabbered Spanish musically, danced, and her face wore a perpetual smile, which was for every one. But if any person attempted to gush her she would knit her brows and shrink away as though terrified. And once her confidence was lost by a bit of banter her good will could never be regained.

There was a young engineer engaged on the same work as myself out there, at the time fresh from one of the "Teck" schools of the northern states. He was twenty years old, handsome as a picture and as bright as a new brass button. What must he do but make love to Inez with all the recklessness of youth regardless of the consequences both to himself and her? I, who was older, saw his danger and warned him. I knew what was up, for in the evening when the day's work was over I would hear on the Basquemento veranda the twang of Inez's guitar, her little flute voice, her merry laughter mingled with sounds which I recognized as coming from Ben Eggleston, the young man who was sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind.

"You little fool," I would say to him, "don't you know that the girl is a mingling of child and woman—child in inexperience, woman in development; that she will fall in love with you and then—"

"I'll break it off at once," would be the young fellow's invariable reply. The boy fully intended to keep his resolution when it was made, but gave up trying to do so when it got cold. The next night I would hear the same pleasant sounds on the veranda and knew that they were breeding a new storm.

This went on till the work on that division was finished and we were about to move. Eggleston assured me there wouldn't be any trouble. The girl was such a child that he couldn't believe she had been attracted to him as she might have been if more of a woman. He was going away and would simply bid her goodbye as he would any other girl of immature years whose companion he had been.

"My advice to you," I said, "is to do no such thing. Go without saying anything about your going."

He didn't take my advice. The day before leaving he told her in a careless way that the engineering party to which he belonged was going to move its headquarters.

"And I will not see you again?" said the girl, her smile vanishing.

"Perhaps not," replied Ben, not thinking it wise to leave her to look forward to meeting him again. "You'll grow up soon and get married. Then you won't want any young men friends like me."

In order the better to kill in her all expectation of getting any nearer to him he told her he had a girl in the north.

That evening I met Inez carrying a cudge in one hand and a canvas bag in the other. She wore the same innocent look she had always worn, but I noticed a peculiar glitter in her eye. There was something incongruous in a little girl's carrying a bludgeon, and, naturally fearful for Ben Eggleston, I could not help vaguely connecting the act with the jilting he was giving her. She passed me without looking back, and, taking position behind a tree, I watched her.

She went along, looking about her on the ground as if searching for something. She spent half an hour in this way, I following her, taking a new position now and then where I would not be observed by her. Presently I saw her hit something with her weapon. Then she picked up what looked to me from a short distance like a baby alligator. She held it by the tail, dropped it into the bag, closed the mouth and went away.

I didn't know what it all meant; but, still timorous about Ben, I told him he had better not wait for the moving of the party, but get out at once. He laughed at me and said there was nothing to fear and if there were he wouldn't run from a little Mexican girl who had scarcely given up her doll.

We engineers slept in a long temporary building one story high. That night I was startled by an unearthly yell. Springing out of bed, I ran along to a room where Eggleston and a roddman slept. The window was open, and Eggleston had just struck a light. His roommate was holding one leg and writhing with pain.

"Kill it!" he yelled.

Then I saw a little alligator looking thing on the floor.

"Kill it! It's the Gila monster and has bitten me. I'm gone up."

Inez's actions were explained. She had dropped the reptile in through the window on Ben, she supposed, but really on his roommate. For a week the poor devil howled in agony, then died.

That was years ago. Ben Eggleston has never married. The bare mention of a woman produces on him a temporary insanity.

The forming of regular habits is most important and while endeavoring to form them the assistance of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is most valuable, as it is the only laxative which acts without disturbing the natural functions and without debilitating and it is the one laxative which leaves the internal organs in a naturally healthy condition, thereby really aiding one in that way. ANCIENT LUXURIES.

Bit-er Lined Cooking Utensils Used Twenty Centuries Ago.

While the housewife of today may reasonably pride herself on the conveniences which her kitchen affords, she need not smile too superciliously at the thought of the makeshifts of days long gone by. She would certainly not do so were she to spend a little time inspecting the kitchen and other household utensils that were in use 2,000 years ago, as exhibited in the national museum at Naples. Saucepans lined with silver, plates richly inlaid with arabesques in silver and shovels handsomely carved figure among the household goods of those times.

An egg frame that would cook twenty eggs at once and pastry molds shaped like shells suggest injuries of the kitchen of 2,000 years ago. Gridirons and frying pans, ragt dishes and cheese graters were in use then as now.

The Roman lady's toilet table was well supplied. Ivory combs, bottles of perfume, pots of cosmetics, buttons, hairpins and even a hair net of gold wire figure in the museum.

Bronze thimbles and spindles are to be seen among the relics. The Roman lady even had her safety pin, for there is a specimen of this little convenience which, before the one in the Naples museum was found, was believed to be a strictly modern invention.

The Roman lady, however, apparently lacked one essential. She had no hairbrush. Neither had she a glass mirror. All the mirrors in the museum, with one exception, are of silver or some other white metal. The exception is a dark purple piece of glass set into the wall of a bedroom at the house Specchio in Pompeii.

In surgical instruments the ancient world was rich. Those found at Pompeii deprive modern science of the credit of more than one invention. Needles, probes and forceps resemble closely those in use at the present day.—Harper's Weekly.

THE CZAR'S LEAVINGS.

A Doubtful Honor That Was Rejected by a Polish Girl.

In Russia royalty is so revered that to the loyal subject it seems a great honor to follow the czar. The government is eminently patriarchal—in theory, at least—and the emperor must supervise as well as patronize the schools. At the Easter festival the pupils are treated with especial favor. Young girls of the upper classes of the Imperial Girls' school are driven in a long procession through the streets in the imperial carriages. The pleasure for them is in that of being allowed to take a drive in a stylish car carriage, with coachman and footman in the imperial livery. There is nothing special to be seen.

The theory of this is that the czar stands in a sort of higher parental relation to all these children. When once a year visits one of these schools—to which only the children of nobility are admitted—it is a custom that as a sign of his favor he drops his pocket handkerchief, and the girls all scramble for it, tearing it in pieces, so that each one can get a fragment.

He takes the most brilliant girl to the table and tastes of the food of the institution. It is valued as the highest distinction when he gives one of the girls his plate with what is left upon it. It is the custom and usage for her to eat it with delight shown in all her features. Great was the astonishment of Alexander II when a young girl, a Pole, whom the czar had taken to the table as being the most distinguished scholar of the institute and to whom he had passed what was left of his meat and potatoes, nodded to a servant and calmly gave him the czar's plate to take away.

An Unfair Attack.

Pietro was working with a gang at railroad construction. He had been told to beware of rattlesnakes, but assured that they would always give the warning rattle before striking.

One hot day he was eating his noon luncheon on a pine log when he saw a big rattler coiled a few feet in front of him. He eyed the serpent and began to lift his legs over the log. He had barely got them out of the way when the snake's fangs bit the bark beneath him.

"Son of a gun!" yelled Pietro. "Why you no rings da bell?"—Every body's.

Scotch Stories.
It was late in the afternoon when the Scotch minister arrived at the farmhouse. The housewife suggested that perhaps he would like a cup of tea before engaging in "exercises." "Na, na," said he, "I aye tak' my tea better when my work is done. I'll just be gawn on. Ye can hing the pen on an' leave the door ajar, an' I'll draw to a close in the prayer when I hear the haam fizin'."

Another woman of Scotland when asked if she had understood the sermon to which she had just been listening replied, "Wad I hae the presumption?"

PORTUGAL PLANS REFORMED NATION

Star Chamber Methods to Be Abolished.

CLERGY TO BE BANISHED

Royal Family Are Safe at Gibraltar and May Go to England to Live. 1000 Were Killed in Lisbon.

Lisbon, Oct. 8.—Senhor Costa, minister of justice, announces that the object of the government's policy is to "introduce a pure, progressive administration within the republic and to consolidate on a moral and practical basis the good relations of Portugal with foreign nations."

The government, it is added, will throw wide to everybody the door of education, assure the national defense on land and sea, administer the colonies on a basis of decentralization and self-government, establish a system of justice that will ensure essential liberty to all, abolish the police magistrates, investigate the expulsion of monks and nuns, close the Roman Catholic schools, compel the civil registration of births, deaths and marriages, separate church and state, and strengthen the nation's credit and finances.

Normal business conditions are being resumed in Lisbon. Cheers which greet the occasional passing of a troop of soldiers, headed by a band playing the republican hymn and the universal display of the republican colors, red and green, are practically the only outward evidences of the momentous change. Almost every man, woman and child wears a red and green coat, and red and green ribbons knotted like soldiers' epaulettes. Even the horses and mules are decorated with republican emblems. Nobody mentions ex-King Manuel or the monarchy, either in pity or condemnation. They are topics which have ceased to interest the people, and even the whereabouts of the ex-king seems to be unknown. The royal palaces of Ajuda and Necessidades are occupied by soldiers, who scrupulously guard the valuables contained therein. The palaces will probably be converted into museums.

Admiral Reis, leader of the revolution, committed suicide Tuesday in the belief that the plans had miscarried and that the republicanism was lost. His body and that of Professor Rombar, whose murder by a military officer precipitated the revolt, have since been lying in state in the municipal chamber, awaiting interment in the national pantheon.

The Vatican Downcast.

Rome, Oct. 8.—It is stated that the pope and the Vatican are greatly downcast by the success of the Portuguese revolutionaries and that the republic will not be recognized. It is likely that the Vatican will recall the papal nuncio at Lisbon forthwith. It is convinced that the Portuguese embassy to the Vatican will be suppressed.

1000 DEAD IN LISBON

Revolutionists Are in Complete Control of Capital of Portugal.
Frankfort-on-Main, Oct. 8.—The correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung at Madrid says that refugees who have arrived there from Vigo, Spain, report the number of fatalities in Lisbon as result of the revolution at about 1000, and that several thousand persons were wounded.

The Lisbon correspondent of the same newspaper says the new government has decreed the dissolution of religious orders, the members of which must quit Portugal within twenty-four hours. Another decree, he says, calls on the clergy to abstain from wearing clerical raiment on the streets so as not to provoke attack.

The censorship at Lisbon has been relaxed somewhat and dispatches are coming more freely from the scene of the revolution. All confirm the earlier reports that the revolutionists are in complete control of the capital and that the infant republic is making progress. The republic has been proclaimed also at many points in the provinces.

ROYAL FAMILY WELL

Formally Welcomed at Gibraltar by British Governor.

Washington, Oct. 8.—Members of the Portuguese royal family are all well at Gibraltar and the two British cruisers which escorted the royal yacht Amelie to that port have sailed for Oporto, according to a dispatch received at the state department from Consul Sprague at Gibraltar.

The general expectation is that the Portuguese king and Queen Mother Amelie will find a permanent refuge in England, where the Duke of Orleans and the queen mother's sister reside. It is believed that the royal family will be offered temporary quarters at Gibraltar, one of the official residences being placed at their disposal.

BOWS TO PEOPLE'S WILL

Manuel Quoted as Submitting to Decree of His Country.

London, Oct. 8.—A news agency publishes a dispatch from Gibraltar quoting King Manuel as saying: "I bow to the will of my people. The advancement and welfare of my country I hold above all things. I shall remain in Gibraltar until the situation shall have cleared up. I do not care to disclose my plans."

The dispatch goes on to say: "The belief is general here that Manuel has no chance to regain his throne. The fact that he voluntarily fled, instead of attempting to rally his forces and defend his throne, makes it extremely unlikely that he could ever successfully head off another revolution."

NOTICE TO WIVES!

You Can Get Divorce If Husband Objects to Cold Feet on His Back.

Logansport, Ind., Oct. 8.—In the case of Margaret Owens against Robert Owens, the refusal of a husband to permit his wife to place her cold feet in the middle of his back was given as grounds for divorce, and Judge John S. Lairy evidently regarded it sufficient, as he rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

The husband, who appeared in the case, testified that his wife from the first of their married life persisted in placing her cold feet in the middle of his back, and that finally he got tired of it and made her stop it. She said that he became so touchy that he would almost crawl out of bed every time she touched him with her feet. She also complained that the husband hadn't kissed her in three years.

The husband answered this by saying that three years ago, during a quarrel, his wife informed him that hereafter they would live together only as "hired girl and boarder," that she would get the meals and that no more should be expected of her than of any hired girl, and that he should take no more liberties than any boarder. He said that, being a married man, he had scruples about kissing the hired girl.

POLICEMAN WORTH $200,000

Oil King Refuses to Quit Work and Reports Every Day.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 8.—Harry Neely, a policeman, who walks a beat in one of the roughest parts of the city, is an oil king worth $200,000, but refuses to quit, because he likes the work.

Neely joined the force six years ago. Recently his father died and left him a farm near the city. He believed it was in the oil belt, and the sinking of a well proved his contention. Other wells have given him a steadily increasing income but he reports for duty every day. His oil interests are handled by his brother.

SLAYS WIFE WITH BABY IN HER ARMS

Husband Then Mortally Wounds Mother-in-Law.

ENDED HIS OWN LIFE

Armed With Shotgun, He Awaited Arrival of His Family by Roadside and Shot Them Down.

Staunton, Va., Oct. 8.—A horrible triple tragedy occurred near Millboro, in Bath county, forty miles southwest of this city, when Edward Mace shot and killed his wife, mortally wounded his mother-in-law and then ended his own life.

The murdered wife was but fifteen years old and carried a baby in her arms when she was shot. She had left her husband but a short time ago on account of brutal treatment and returned recently to the neighborhood.

As soon as Mace learned of her presence he armed himself with a single barrel loading shotgun and a full supply of ammunition and then secreted himself close by the roadside along which his wife and mother-in-law had to pass.

As they came along the road Mace sprang from the underbrush, and with the remark: "I will fix you both," he shot to death his wife, who held their sleeping infant in her arms.

Reloading the weapon, he immediately turned it upon the mother-in-law with deadly intent, the load tearing a wound in her left side, from which it is thought she will die. Reloading a third time, Mace placed the weapon against his body, pulled the trigger and ended his own life.

There were no eyewitnesses to the tragedy, but the shots and screams were heard from a nearby farm house, the occupants rushing to the scene too late to be of any assistance, only to find the lifeless bodies of husband and wife and the mortally wounded form of the mother-in-law.

The infant was unharmed and still lay peacefully asleep in the embrace of its lifeless mother.

AGREE ON SAFETY DEVICES

Railroads and Employes Reach Accord on Subject of Appliances.

Washington, Oct. 8.—Definite standards of safety appliances to be attached to railway cars and locomotives finally have been agreed upon between the country's railroads and their employes, after nearly a third of a century of effort.

It is estimated that the proposed changes in equipment will cost the railroads about $50,000,000.

The agreement was reached by a committee appointed last week by the interstate commerce commission, after a two-days' hearing. The committee consisted of fifteen men, equally divided between representatives of the operating departments of the railroads, safety appliance inspectors of the commission and railroad operatives.

Radical differences of opinion and judgment were met by concessions by all interested parties, and the agreement reached is unanimous, as to all equipment to be constructed in the future, except as to the placing of four-wheel steps on non-projecting end box cars. That question will have to be determined by the commission.

DEFENCE FOR LABOR CHIEFS

Brief Says Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison Were Not in Contempt.

Washington, Oct. 8.—A brief of defense was filed in the supreme court of the United States by Judge Alton B. Parker and associated counsel in the contempt proceedings against Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, officials of the American Federation of Labor.

On the arguments thus presented these labor leaders will place their chief reliance in their fight to escape sentence imposed upon them by the courts of the District of Columbia.

The three officials were sentenced to imprisonment on a charge of disobeying a decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, forbidding references in their official organ to the Buck Stove and Range company, of St. Louis, being on the unfair list of the Federation.

The principal defense set forth in the brief was that the reference in the official organ of the Federation did not contain contempt for the court, because its decree was beyond the power of the court to declare, as had been shown by a modification of the decree in the court of appeals.

"Naturally, and not unreasonably, the respondents were sore over their defeat," says the brief, in discussing the alleged offenses. "It would be strange, too, if they were not more or less resentful of an opinion not lacking in personal denunciations, even to the extent of charging two of them, Gompers and Mitchell, with deliberate false testimony. Not unreasonably, then, not unreasonably, they sought to vindicate themselves."

GREAT LIFE PRESERVER—TRY IT.

When Rufus skinned across the fence to steal the parson's hen, he did not know a cross building was on guard in the pen.

When that big building nabbed that nig as he did down alight, he did not know his pistol pocket was full of dynamite.

When that explosive went off it killed the building dead. While Rufus chuckled, grabbed a hen and quickly with it sped.

"Look here, now, you are kiddin' me! How could that nig escape? I can't believe a poet, sir, I would thus prevaricate."

Why, Rufus was a Coney badge, and when the charge blew up it simply glanced right off the badge and hit the big bull pup.

FRESH PURE AIR FOR POULTRY.

There was a day when folks thought to get eggs from a hen by roasting her. They set up cracked cook stoves in the coop and made things sizzle; but, of course, it was a fizzle. Feed was served steaming, water was warmed, fresh air was filtered in by the ounce, and hens were dosed with red-hot pepper.

Oh, what air castles have been torn down by modern methods!

Indeed, the world has been revolutionized on the air question. If a doctor fifty years ago had advised a consumptive to take his bed and sleep in the back yard with the chickens he would have been arrested for non compos mentis.

We all need more oxygen and less medicine; no hot air—only pure air. The

OPEN FRONT HOUSE.

American hen, with $1,000,000,000 a year to her credit, is no mocking bird. No canary cage, no bandbox for Biddy. She breathes faster than a man. She exhales her moisture from her mouth. She needs the maximum amount of oxygen for health, growth and eggs.

Stale air, flatless, sickly fock, empty egg crock; fresh air, life, health, bright eyes, cackle, lively legs and big fresh eggs. A healthy hen has her own heater, and she'll keep the temperature over 100 if you do your part. Give her a cozy roost, a dry, roomy, airy (not drafty) house, where she may scratch good feed out of dry litter and have cutbone grit, greens and fresh water, and you'll get eggs in California or Alaska.

Our photo is a good sample of open front fresh air house which is very popular today. On stormy days and nights the heavy muslin curtain is dropped and buckled at the sides, the air percolating through and the windows giving light.

The roost is closed with a drop curtain when the weather makes it necessary, but both day and night the fowls have plenty of new, pure air.

Others have the whole front open. Some just curtain the ordinary windows, but all who use them declare that hens are healthier and do better than in the old stuffy, ill smelling, dusty, frosty walled pens.

DON'TS.

Don't build a poultry plant that resembles a hunk slab town. Bums prefer slums.

Don't let that hen scratch in your neighbor's garden, especially if he is a preacher.

Don't blame a neighbor for that cholera scourge when you have a block of rundown mongrel stock.

Don't fight with your neighbor about his chicken killing cat. Instruct the bulldog. He'll attend to that.

Don't put off a reply to an inquiry until another gets the order. Procrastination, liquidation, ruination.

Don't buy a place for a poultry plant until you know the price, quantity and quality of grain supplied and raised in the locality. Look everything in the face before you buy a place.

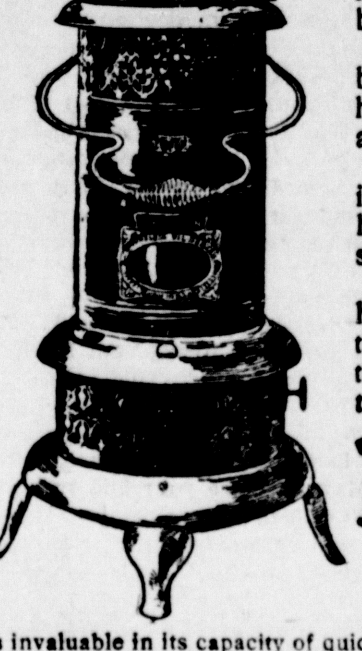

Don't expect to hold trade if you cheat. If you eat rotten eggs sell them. If you sell bum, tough chickens at a bon ton price to your rich mother-in-law then sell them to your trade.

A dry season has its advantages along with some drawbacks. One of those is that it simplifies greatly the question of soil tillage and weed destruction, which are a serious matter in wet seasons.

A fact that is worth while for the poultryman to remember is that a skunk never climbs and that a place of tight fence three feet high placed across the door of the henhouse will be an effective bar to his entrance.

Temporary Heat Quickly

Did you ever stop to think of the many ways in which a perfect oil heater is of value? If you want to sleep with your window open in winter, you can get sufficient heat from an oil heater while you undress at night, and then turn it off. Apply a match in the morning, when you get out of bed, and you have heat while you dress.

Those who have to eat an early breakfast before the stove is radiating heat can get immediate warmth from an oil heater, and then turn it off.

The girl who practices on the piano in a cold room in the morning can have warmth from an oil heater while she plays, and then turn it off.

The member of the family who has to walk the floor on a cold winter's night with a restless baby can get temporary heat with an oil heater, and then turn it off. The

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

is invaluable in its capacity of quickly giving heat. Apply a match and it is immediately at work. It will burn for nine hours without refilling. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. It has a damper top and a cool handle. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the tank.

It has an automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, and can be quickly unscrewed for reworking. Finished in Japan or nickel, strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

A MAGIC CLUB.

Curious Decoy Used by the Native Fishermen of Hawaii.

"Lau melomelo" is the name of a decoy used by the native fishermen of Hawaii. It is made of the hardest wood to be found on the islands and is carved and rubbed till it assumes the shape of a club with a little knob at the smaller end, to which the line is tied.

The club is from one to three feet long. A village sorcerer performs certain rites over it over a sacred fire. After this is done the club is magic and the fisherman must be extremely careful of it. If a woman should step over it or enter a canoe in which it lies the club would lose all its power and would be useless over after that.

After the fish has been charmed the fisherman takes candle and cocoa nut meat, bakes it and ties the mixture in a wrapper of coconut fiber.

At the fishing grounds the club is covered with the oily juice of the stuff and is then lowered carefully to the bottom. The scent of the baked oil meat attracts certain kinds of fish, which soon gather and begin to nibble at the club. As soon as enough fish are around the decoy a small bag shaped net is lowered very gently until its mouth is just over the club. The latter is then pulled up carefully and cunningly till it is within the bag. The fish are so eager for the stuff with which they follow it into the net without fear. As soon as all the fish are in it a fisherman dives and closes the mouth of the net, whereupon the rest haul it up quickly.

A series of corn growing experiments which have been conducted by the Missouri experiment station in cooperation with leading farmers in several sections of the state have shown that the Boone County White was the most popular and highest yielding variety. Next in rank came the Commercial White and St. Charles White, with Reid's Yellow Dent ranking fourth in the respects mentioned. The directors of the station assert that yield cannot be considered as in any vital way dependent upon color, but rather upon soil, time of maturity, adaptability to soil, depth of kernel and some other considerations.

There is a Heap of Solace in Being Able to Depend Upon a Well-Earned Reputation.

For months Gettysburg readers have seen the constant expression of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills, and read about the good work they have done in this locality. Not another remedy ever produced such convincing proof of merit.

Mrs. Charles Kennel, 401 S. Washington St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "I publicly recommended Doan's Kidney Pills two years ago and I have not changed my opinion of them. I still consider this remedy the best one on the market for kidney trouble. A member of my family suffered from rheumatism and kidney complaint and was subject to acute attacks of backache. There was a stiffness and lameness across the loins, especially noticeable in the morning and a tired, languid feeling was in evidence. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the People's Drug Store, brought the first relief that had ever been received and when they have been taken since then, benefit has always followed. It gives me great pleasure to tell of the merits of this remedy."

Willing to Help. "When I was a young fellow, just beginning the practice of law," said Magistrate House, "two of the oddest characters about the courts were the Cohen brothers, David and Philip. They had a habit of appearing on the opposite sides of the same case. One day when Chief Justice Shay called the calendar in the city court David Cohen answered 'Ready' for the plaintiff in one case, and immediately Philip Cohen answered 'Ready' for the defendant. On the second call David again answered 'Ready,' but Philip answered 'Not ready.' This caused Justice Shay to say: 'Why, Philip Cohen, fifteen minutes ago you were ready. How is it that you are not ready now?' 'May it please your honor,' replied Philip Cohen, 'I was ready when you first called the calendar, but I have learned that my brother David has fifteen witnesses in court, and I have only twelve. I should like an adjournment so that I may be able to go out and get three more witnesses.' 'Whereupon up spoke Brother David, saying: 'May it please your honor, if that is all that is worrying my brother Philip, the case can go on. I will lend him three of my witnesses.' " New York World.

A Familiar Warning. Mrs. Jones' favorite warning to her young progeny when they were in mischief was that she would tend to them in a minute. "Tending" was accomplished by applying her open hand where it would do the most good. When Harry was four years old he was sent for the first time round the corner to the grocery. In a few minutes he came trotting soberly back with the nickel still in his hand, but no bag of onions.

"What's the matter?" asked his mother.

"I'm 'fraid of the man," he said solemnly.

"Oh, he won't hurt you," reassured Mrs. Jones. "Run along and bring the onions. I'm in a hurry for them."

A second time Harry disappeared round the corner and a second time returned without his purchase.

"I'm 'fraid of the grocer man," he explained as before.

"Well, what makes you afraid of him?" demanded his mother impatiently.

"Why," answered the little fellow, "b'fo times when I good in he looked at me an' said, 'I'll tend to you in a minute!'"

There is probably no enterprise that can be set afoot in a section where cows can be kept that will do more to conserve the fertility of the soil and swell the bank accounts of the inhabitants than starting a creamery. In the long run a co-operative concern will prove the most successful, as most of the patrons of the creamery will be joint proprietors and will for that reason support the enterprise more steadfastly. There is little use in starting a project of this kind unless there are 500 or 600 cows in the locality which can be counted upon to supply the raw material. A creamery plant, including building and necessary equipment, will cost in the neighborhood of from $2500 to $3000. Before launching an enterprise of this kind it would be well worth while for those backing it to visit several successful creameries and when the time comes to organize have present a state dairy expert or some other man who has had first hand experience with the creamery business organized on similar lines. It will cost something to get this kind of advice, but it will be the cheapest money invested in the whole enterprise.

Mr. Micklejohn

He Was a Fine Fellow and Served an Important Purpose

By F. A. MITCHELL
Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Everard Tomlinson was considered an admirable catch. He was a fine fellow in every way and when he came of age fell heir to a fortune of some $800,000. He was beset by fortune hunting girls.

It was something of a relief, therefore, when Mrs. Stetson, an old friend of his mother, reminded him that he was promised to her for a visit at her unpretentious bungalow on Lake Waspogie for the last two weeks in September. He had engaged for this visit in the spring to please his mother and before he had made his round of house parties. At that time he looked forward to two weeks in Mrs. Stetson's bungalow as burying himself in the woods. There was to be no other guest, and the family consisted only of Mrs. Stetson, her son, Roy, aged sixteen, and her daughter, Alice, aged twenty. Tomlinson was told that it would not be necessary to bring evening dress; that he would need flannel shirts and any old clothes he might possess. His days would be passed in a rowboat and his evenings in the living room of the bungalow with the family sitting around a table reading by a kerosene lamp.

After being hunted by spinsters Tomlinson rather liked the idea of getting away by himself. True, there was Alice Stetson, who might be lying in wait for him, but it was not improbable that he could get away occasionally alone for a pull over the waters of the lake.

It was near the 1st of October when Tomlinson was driven up to the rear door of the bungalow—the house facing the lake and was built on its verge—and the foliage had already begun to take on its variegated hues. Mrs. Stetson and Roy welcomed the guest. Tomlinson noticed the absence of Miss Alice and was so well bred as to say that he hoped she was not from home. He was told that she was in the house, but would not appear before dinner. Her mother vaguely hinted that there was a reason for her keeping her room for the present, and from the sympathetic tone in which the statement was made Tomlinson inferred that some sad event had occurred.

Alice came out of her room as dinner was announced. She did not say anything about the lugubrious event, but she looked intensely sad. Indeed, her eyes were red, an evidence that she had been weeping. The effort she made to seem cheerful was touching. Tomlinson was tempted to inquire what was the cause of her melancholy, but was too well bred to trespass on the sacred feelings of a young girl. Alice retired to her room early in the evening.

The next morning her depression continued, though Tomlinson noticed that she ate heartily. Mrs. Stetson suggested that she show Tomlinson the beauties of Waspogie lake. Alice cast a look of appeal at her mother as much as to say, "It's cruel that I must exert myself to entertain a stranger when my heart is crushed," but the mother insisted, telling her daughter that the fresh air would raise her spirits and that she should make an effort.

What kind of an effort she should make the mother did not explain. Roy got out a boat, and as Alice stepped into it dressed in a very becoming blouse and a short skirt Tomlinson noticed that she possessed a foot and ankle the curves of which were very delicately turned. She asked Roy if he was not going with them, and when he said he was going instead for ducks she gave him a reproachful glance. Tomlinson, relieved at Roy's refusal, took the oars and pulled away from the front porch, which served as a landing for the little bungalow buried under trees and shrubbery, dipping his oars into water lilies, then gliding away into deep water.

There was an autumn crispness in the air, and Tomlinson wished the lady were in a better condition to enjoy it with him. He drew her into conversation and soon learned the cause of her distress. When he admired a clump of trees on the crest of a knoll she said, "Mr. Micklejohn always admired that." When he pulled into a little cove with a tiny beach overhung with wildwood and remarked what a charming spot it was she replied sadly, "Mr. Micklejohn and I always used to pull in here when we came out boating."

"May I ask who Mr. Micklejohn is?" "Oh!" This was an exclamation as though she had unwittingly betrayed herself. "Mr. Micklejohn is a very good friend of ours. He left us yesterday morning just before you came." It was all out. This bee Micklejohn had been there, had captured the prize and there was no sweetness left for poor Tomlinson.

"Pardon me," he said, with a suspicion of haughtiness, "I did not know that I was trespassing on sacred ground." "Oh, no. I assure you you quite mis take me." "In what respect?" "It's as I said. Mr. Micklejohn is a very good friend to us all—mother, Roy, all of us." "But when he goes away you do the mourning." She looked very much hurt at this almost off-handed.

Tomlinson was disgruntled. Notwithstanding that this was very different from the social life he had been enjoying he would have liked the change, especially for the company of this pretty girl, had not Micklejohn spoiled it all by going away, taking her heart with him. With the girls Tomlinson had met he was surfeited. Here was a girl so preoccupied with another that she couldn't even be companionable. This is a specimen of the way she talked about Micklejohn: "Do you sing? No! Mr. Micklejohn has such a lovely tenor voice. When he sings he thrills me. He used to sing parts from 'Faust,' and I almost wished I had been Marguerite. Mr. Micklejohn is very versatile. He is the best whist player, the best billiard player, the best horseback rider, the best swimmer."

"Did you tumble out of the boat when he was here that he might swim ashore with you?" "How ridiculous!" She pouted. Tomlinson asked her to go on with the catalogue of Micklejohn's accomplishments, but she turned away from him as from one who had slapped the face of her idol and, pulling on the port rudder rope, headed the boat for the bungalow.

After dinner Alice sat at the table in the living room with her mother, her brother and Tomlinson—that is to say, she was going to sit there, but the guest spoiled it all and drove her away by asking if Mr. Micklejohn read poetry to her by the dim light of the kerosene lamp. At this reference to the dear departed Micklejohn Mrs. Stetson cast a frightened glance at her daughter. Roy was reading a book, the game of football and was oblivious to the shock to his sister's sensibilities. Alice arose and, with her eyes bent to the floor, left the room. Tomlinson could have bitten off his tongue, for a long evening was before him with no other companions than an elderly lady and a boy, the room in which they were being lighted by a dim lamp. Mrs. Stetson retired at 9 and Roy half an hour later. Tomlinson vowed that if the period of this seclusion ever expired it seemed to him that it never would—he would not get into such a trap again. Besides, he was much plagued after having been sought by finer girls to be completely ignored, considered a personage of no importance whatever compared with the immaculate Micklejohn. A desire came to him to supplant Mr. Micklejohn and when he had done so leave Lake Waspogie with his nose in the air.

The next morning Mrs. Stetson, evidently still concerned about her daughter's sorrow, suggested another boat ride. Alice didn't seem to care what she did so long as Mr. Micklejohn was absent. She yielded possibly to her mother's wish. The boat was taken out, and the guest of the house, with the listless girl, again left the bungalow.

Tomlinson bore the references to Micklejohn, gritting his teeth, but making no reply. His object was rather to draw Alice's attention away from this remarkable man to other subjects from which he might the more easily direct it to himself. He exerted whatever lady killing faculties he possessed for an hour, at the end of which time his companion seemed really to have plucked up some interest in her surroundings. Then for an hour she failed to mention the lost one. Tomlinson was encouraged.

Two weeks passed, each day being a gradual drawing away of Alice Stetson from a man who was absent to a man who was present. All the delicious little nooks which bordered on the lake were visited again and again, and at last Tomlinson chuckled to himself.

"Now bring on your Micklejohn." One bright morning they were drifting idly through some rushes. There's nothing like some rushes, some smooth water, a little brush and a few overhanging trees, with a man and a girl in a boat, to make a picture of young love. Tomlinson was making an effort to complete the shattering of the sacred image—Micklejohn. He overshot the mark and made use of the word "love." Had Miss Stetson been sitting at the other end of the boat from him possibly what happened might not have happened, at least not then. But they were sitting side by side. Alice's head fell on Tomlinson's shoulder. What could he do? He completed the transition. The burden was removed from the shoulders of the dear departed and placed upon those of the newcomer.

This is a letter written by Alice Stetson to her bosom friend Molly Bawn announcing her engagement: "You see, dearest, mamma knew from Mrs. Tomlinson that Ned was beset by a lot of society girls of that class which is trying to live in swell-dom without having the means to do so. Mrs. Tomlinson was afraid some of them would get him and, knowing what a plain, modest, unassuming girl I am, without a bit of deception in my nature, she asked mamma to invite Ned here, hoping he and I might make a match. Mamma said he wouldn't look at me after all the due ladies he had met. This set me to thinking, and I determined to be as unlike them as possible. When he came I pretended to have just parted with somebody else—a Mr. Micklejohn. I called him—talking about what a fine fellow he was, how I missed him, and all that. till Ned got so mad every time I mentioned his name that I thought he would murder me. Now I'm afraid he'll murder me when he finds out that Mr. Micklejohn is a myth."

"We're going to be married during the holidays, and I wish you to be my first bridesmaid. We're not going to have a splurge wedding, but quite gay enough to warrant the prettiest gown you can invent."

Manure that lies a year before it is spread will contribute needed humus to the soil, but considerably more than half of its fertilizing value will have been lost. A way to get around much of this loss during the growing season, when much of the land is occupied with growing crops, is to scatter the manure as fast as it accumulates on the pastures, which need fertilizing as badly as do other portions of the farm.

RUDE AMERICANS.

They Laughed in the Face of a Well-Informed Englishman.

"Americans are rude, extremely so," said the Englishman just four days over. "They don't want to be told anything; think they know it all. Yesterday three men who sat in double seats with me in an elevated train were arguing over a matter that none of them seemed to have definite information on. It happened to be something that I had read a long article about the night before, so I spoke up and told them what I knew. Now, in my country we would thank a man who did that, but these Americans didn't thank me. They laughed in my face; that is what they did."

"That is strange," said his American friend. "Americans are usually very grateful for every bit of information offered them. What did you tell them, anyhow?" "Well, they were fussing about which city had the finest diamond in the country. One said Philadelphia had, another Chicago; the other stuck out for Pittsburg. I said: 'Pardon me, gentlemen, you are all mistaken. Urica has the finest diamond in the United States. I read about it last night. It weighs I forget how many carats and was brought from London by a Mrs. Patterson about a year ago.' 'And then they laughed. Why, they actually roared. Very rude Americans are, I think.'—New York Times.

A Fatal Breather. "Mark Twain hated a gloomy man," said a New York editor. "Once, at a banquet, a gloomy man sat opposite him. This man would not smile at the most amusing jokes."

"What's the matter with you?" cried Mark Twain. "The stories are all good. Why don't you laugh?"

"Ah, sir," said the gloomy man, "how can I laugh when I remember that every time I breathe a soul passes into the great beyond?" "Good gracious," said the humorist, "did you ever try cloves?"

He Told Her. A young woman stenographer who does a big business with the patrons of a busy hotel was talking about the peculiarities of her clients.

"What I call a man in a hurry," she said, "is a man who will hand me a card with an address on it and a few notes of what he wants said and tell me to write the letter and mail it and hurry away. I have quite a number of those."

"The most interesting man I ever had was one who stopped and gave me a visiting card. His address was engraved in the lower corner. He handed me a dollar with the card and said, 'Please write a letter for me.' 'I said: 'Certainly. To whom?' 'To my wife,' he answered. 'That is my name you have on the card.' 'I understand that,' I told him, 'but what shall I write about?' 'Oh, write about a page,' he replied as he smiled and strode away."—Chicago Tribune.

Rough on Irving. In the excitement of the moment public speakers often say the opposite of what they mean to convey, and when Henry Irving gave a reading in the Ulster hall in 1878, says Bram Stoker in "Personal Reminiscences of Henry Irving," one speaker made as pretty an Irish bull as could be found, though the bull is generally supposed to belong to other provinces than the hard headed Ulster. In descending on the many virtues of the guest of the evening he mentioned the excellence of his moral nature and rectitude of his private life in these terms: "Mr. Irving, sir, is a gentleman what leads a life of unbroken blemish."

me to write the letter and mail it and hurry away. I have quite a number of those.

"The most interesting man I ever had was one who stopped and gave me a visiting card. His address was engraved in the lower corner. He handed me a dollar with the card and said, 'Please write a letter for me.' 'I said: 'Certainly. To whom?' 'To my wife,' he answered. 'That is my name you have on the card.' 'I understand that,' I told him, 'but what shall I write about?' 'Oh, write about a page,' he replied as he smiled and strode away."—Chicago Tribune.

Integrity Value

Integrity in all our dealings with the public has been our guiding principle since the establishment of our business over twenty-five years ago.

In the gathering of our immense stock for this Fall, as in the past, Value has been the object, as well as having in stock what the clientele of this community want. Our community extends to a radius of fifteen miles and over, which necessitates a full and well assorted stock

We owe our success and growth to the confidence of our customers, brought about by the giving of Best Values and the way of giving them.

While we are doing a very unusual business for a town the size of Gettysburg, we are in a position of stock and values to do much more, and we ask those who are tempted to order from the many catalogues circulated through this county, whose values look glittering on paper, to investigate our stock. Buy from merchants that you know carry only good goods, and who are able and do sell as cheaply as good goods can be sold at, and with no transportation cost; and when there is disappointment in your purchase you can get at us personally, without expense for money back or exchange.
